Play it safe

Underwriters Laboratories Inc. has been around for more than 100 years, working to certify the safety of more than 17 billion new products each year. With a staff of more than 5,000 engineers and other professionals, UL evaluates products including household appliances, building construction materials, safety devices such as smoke alarms and fire extinguishers, and toys.

UL has issued these guidelines for toys:

- Read the manufacturer's warning labels and, if applicable, use and care booklet.

- Immediately discard plastic packaging.

- Pay close attention to the recommended age designations marked on the toy.

- Initially and periodically inspect toys for breaks, ripped seams and sharp edges.

- Make sure a responsible adult assembles the product according to manufacturer's instructions.

- Make sure your toy chest is safe and designed with children in mind.

- Toys designed for outdoor play should be put away after use so they don't become wet, rusty or damaged.

- Keep deflated and ripped balloons away from children.

- Be alert and informed about any toy recalls.

- Don't allow children to use electric toys near water.

- Underwriters Laboratories Inc. is an independent, not-for-profit testing and certification organization. For more consumer safety information, refer to the "Consumers" section of UL's Web site: www.ul.com/consumers/index.html. (CNS)
